Neuroscience Nurse Profile

Name: Lynn Goodloe

Position Held:

President, American Association of Neuroscience Nurses

Country/Institution:

United States/Virginia Commonwealth University Health System

Describe what/who influenced your decision to become a neuroscience nurse:

The first spinal cord injury patient that I cared for as a new graduate nurse cemented my future in neuroscience nursing. I learned through caring for him that this would be the profession I would engage in for the rest of my nursing career. He allowed me to learn all that I had not learned in nursing school and he also cemented my commitment to help my patient's determine their own plan of care and quality of life.

Briefly describe a highlight of your neuroscience career:

The opportunities to serve as the president of AANN and to represent our organization in Barcelona, Spain at the WFNN are truly two of the highlights of my neuroscience nursing career.

What has been a professional/person achievement?

I was selected to receive a research award at the completion of my Master's Degree for the nursing satisfaction study that I conducted at my hospital.

What are your future goals?

I want to make the services and products offered by our professional Neuroscience nursing organizations available to every practicing Neuroscience nurse.
